Seaworthiness certificate pdf

When you send valuable products or when dealing with a very conscientious customer, an inspection certificate may be requested. An inspection certificate provides proof that what you are shipping is, in fact, what the customer ordered, and is also of good quality. If a customer requests this document, approve it. According to Export.gov, administrative and inspection fees associated with an inspection certificate are generally paid by the importer or importing country, but certain costs can be invoiced to the buyer. Also, ask the customer to recommend an independent inspection agency to perform the review in yours. If the buyer doesn't have one, refer to your import/export dream team (e.g. banker, logistics expert, accountant, and lawyer) for an appropriate contact. An inspection certificate may be submitted directly to a buyer, a buyer's government, or directly to a buyer's bank. When presenting to a buyer bank, it is issued by the request for a payment transaction of credit stating an inspection certificate required in order to meet payment obligations. Generally, a manufacturer provides the certificate or report. The governments of a number of countries have ongoing relations with international inspection companies to verify the quantity, quality and price of shipments imported into their countries. Here are four such companies: Bureau Veritas GroupCotecnaIntertekSGS The purpose of these companies is to help when you need to be sure of one aspect of a sold product. For example, you may need to validate the price charged by an exporter to reflect the true value of the goods and to prevent lower-quality goods from entering the country. Another reason is to divert attempts to avoid paying customs duties. Countries that request or require an inspection certificate before the shipment vary from year to year and are based on a shipment above a certain value. However, in some countries an inspection certificate is required regardless of the value, so be sure to ask. Export.gov has a list of countries to control: Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Comors, Republic of Congo (Brazzaville), Democratic Republic of Congo (Kinshasa), Ivory Coast, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Kuwait, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Moldova, Mauritania, Mozambique, Niger, Nigeria, Peru, Russia, Rwanda, Saudia Arabie, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Tanzania, Togo, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Zanzibar and Zimbabwe. If you export an agricultural product, such as nuts, fruits, seeds, grains and vegetables, you will need a federal phytosanitary inspection certificate. This certificate is issued by the U.S. Department of Agriculture to comply with import regulations for foreign countries. This suggests that an American shipment has been inspected and is free from toxic plant and pest diseases. More the phytosanitary certificate, usda issues the export certificate for processed plant products and the certificate of quality and condition. If a processed plant product cannot be given a phytosanitary certificate but has been refused entry to one or more countries for not having health certification, an Export Certificate may be issued. Some products in this category are bulk nuts that are salted, roasted, or vacuum packed in or out of their shells, soy-enriched products, and meals extracted from the seeds of a solvent. The certificate of quality and condition is offered by the USDA's Processed Products Branch after the official inspection and classification of canned, frozen and dehydrated fruits and vegetables, and related products. This certificate is available on a fee basis and can be tailored to meet your specific import/export needs. In the event of disagreement with the outcome of the inspection process, a resolution should be negotiated with the inspection company. In some cases, the exporter and the inspection company may cooperate to resolve the problem. Get startedImpression your employer with a verified certificate that documents your learning.
